

Nutrition and Foods, Community Nutrition Certificate

This certificate advances students' understanding of the interaction between nutrition and health. The focus is on community wellness through dietary choices, as they relate to the nutritional needs of individuals throughout the lifecycle, cultural influences, community programs targeted at addressing nutrition-related issues and basic food preparation techniques. After completing the classes for this certificate, students may apply credits toward CRC's Nutrition & Foods associate's degree program. Students earning this certificate are not qualified to practice medical nutrition therapy.
